Emile de Girardin, whose authority in such a matter we could not doubt, wrote, the 5th of October last, in the newspaper, I expected to see at Mettray the expensive loss of an ineffectual philanthropy. . . . What were my gratification and surprise. . . . to see the most perfect order and the strictest economy. . . . and not to behold any where, I will not say any trace of luxury, or of any needless expense. . . . as also I might convince myself of it in reading all the responsible works now before me 1. . . . tors, to which they could make no objection, which had not been first anticipated. It would be a valid one, say they, if it only related to a simple establishment for labour, if we were only to teach them one...
