Between him and the writer there was a substantial agreement on all the great issues of the civil war and especially on the subjects treated in the address, which were often and, anxiously discussed, during the last year of his life. A thoughtful man, but never in haste to speak, lie incessantly pondered in his heart the great issues of the terrible conflict, and though sorrowful always, and at times desponding, he never faltered in stern loyalty to his government, nor to his race; or in fealty to his Saviour. Of ample fortune, yet despising the social consideration which men are too apt to claim on that ground alone, he was, to the last, the friend and intimate companion of the poorest of men. Making no pretension to learning, his knowledge of men, of society, and of all the graver affairs of human life, was wide, intimate and accurate. His habit of uttering the most matured opinions in the interrogative form, as though he would inquire rather than affirm, did not conceal from his intimate friends, his just confidence in the general correctness of the conclusions he had reached. In the constant exercise of a most generous hospitality, and though in the Fifty-ninth year of his age, he had the happy faculty of making himself agreeable to the young of both sexes, and his usually quiet, country home,...
